LUTHER AND HIS WORK

The Opening Lecture in the Columbian Unlversity Course.

Rev. Dr. Mckim's Account of the Great German Reformer's Work and His Times.

The initial lecture of the course under the auspices of the Columbian University was given in the university hall yesterday afternoon before a large and appreciative

Rev. Dr. Randolph H. McKim was the lecturer, and the subject of his discourse was "Luther and the Reformation." Dr. McKim was introduced by Prof. Montague.

to do anything against his conscience." "These words," said the speaker, "strike the keynote of the Reformation, which was pre-eminently the rights of the individual conscience. They carry with them the vindication of the right of every man to claim direct access to God, who speaks to each by His spirit. They sweep away the claim of any priesthood to stand between a man and his God as the exclusive channel of communication. They sound the death knell of priestcraft and proclaim glad tidings of liberty to the enslaved conscience.
"The story of Luther and the Reformation," continued the speaker, "was written by St. Paul when he said: 'God chose the foolish things of the world that He might put to shame them that are wise; and God chose the weak things of the world that He might put to shame the things that are strong, and the base things of the world and the things that are despised did God choose; yea, and the things that are not

Luther belongs to no sect or denomina tion of Christians, the speaker said, but to the Christendem itself-to no nationality, but to mankind.

The work God sent him to do was not that he might bring to naught the things that are; that no flesh should glory before for Europe or for Germany, much less for the Lutheran denomination, but for the

The Man and the Time. Martin Luther, he said, was a man sent from God to prepare the way of the Lord. He must be studied in connection with his age and as one manifestation of a movement greater than himself. The time was ripe for the coming of Luther when Luther came. Had he blown his trumpet in another age, he had not awakened the world, as he did. He was not the first reformer. He had his forerunners, who had made noble protest against the corruptions of the church, but their efforts had been in vain. God had been silently preparing the way by various instruments for the work of reformation. The revival of letters, the rekindling of interest in classical study, the first movements of modern science, the general awakening of the mind of Europe after the sleep of ages—all contributed, the speaker said, to prepare the world to listen to the voice which was about to issue from Germany.

Luther proclaimed that Christ, the son of righteousness, and not the church, is the center of our faith and hope, and that to Him alone is due the allegiance of the soul. The speaker referred to the divine commission of Luther, which, he said, certified that he was no eccentric genius pursuing an idea born in his own brain, but one whom God has called and commissioned to do a work for Him.

Luther, preperly speaking, is not a product of his age, though his age furnished a proper soil for a growth such as he. He was a distinct and a mighty force moving the age onward. It was emphatically the age of Luther. No one else of the time could have taken his place, so deeply is his personality impressed upon it, said the speaker, that it would be nearer the truth that the age was molded by Luther, than to say that Luther was the product of the age. The great strength of Luther lay in the depth and force, the vividness and reality of his religious experience, kindling and fusing all the great forces of his great nature. At twenty Luther was lecturing on philosophy at the University of Erfurth, when his mind became profoundly agitated by the inquiry: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" He could get no answer to his inquiries. The gospel of grace and pardon was unknown to him. He answered them for himself and determined to enter a cloister, where, by prayer and fasting, he might fit himself for heaven. This he did, being known as Brother Martin at the Augustinean monastery. While here he chanced upon a Bible, and was surprised that, contrary to the church and her learned doctors, this book of God teaches men to hope for salvation by faith, through grace, and not by works. It did not prescribe penance, but penitence, nor teach men to work out their own salvation, but to accept the salvation wrought by Christ. Slowly Luther reached the conclusion that "Eternal life is the gift of God bestowed out of His mere mercy." This chapter from the heart history of Luther throws a flood of light upon his life, upon his work, upon the Reformation itself, and makes it clear why he was able to speak so straight to the heart of his countrymen. Right here, also, was the heart of the Reformation. It was the mighty effort of the human soul to recover the truth of salvation through Christ by faith.

The Famous Theses. The speaker referred to another chapter in the life of Luther-that which tells of his external conflicts, his great battle with the colossal power of the Church of Rome, waged with intrepid courage and unflagging energy for thirty years. Ten years had elapsed before Luther came into collision with the church. During that time he diligently taught at Wittenberg the doctrine of forgiveness by the blood of Christ through faith. It was the shameful traffic in indulgencies which precipitated the breach with Rome. He denounced the traffic with voice and pen. He prepared nmety-five theses against indulgencies, and with his own hand nailed them against the loor of the Castle Church at Wittenberg. Such an act, he said, was fraught with danger, and meant that the doer was publicly assailing the stability of the Catholie Church, which claimed absolute supremacy over the consciences of men. Thus it was that the first act of the drama of the reformation was ushered in. Then follow-ed a period of exciting discussions in pulpit and press. The pope, the speaker said, rises in his wrath and demands that Luther recant. He refuses, saying he must obey God rather than man. In 1520 Luther was excommunicated. His answer to the pope for this was speedily given, and building a funeral pyre he publicly burned the bull of excommunication before the holy cross at the east gate of Wittenberg. The burning of the papal bull illuminates a second great blessing, said the speaker, which we owe to the reformation, and especially to Luther. This act of Luther's was a declara-tion of independence, he asserted, on behalf of the Christian people against the tyrannies and usurpation of the pope and of the church, and in principle an assertion of Christian liberty against all ecclesiastical usurpations whatsoever. What He Accomplished.

The speaker then went on to relate how Luther was summoned before the Emperor Charles V, and boldly refused to recant, saying: "Until I am better instructed I cannot recant. It is not wise, it is not safe, for a man to do anything against his conscience. Here I stand. I cannot do otherwise. God help me. Amen." Here again, said the speaker, stands out one of the great principles of the reformation, of which Luther was the leader and embodiment. He stood for the majesty of truth before all earthly pomp and power, and for the supremacy of conscience above all political or church authority. Luther's trip back to Wittenberg was interestingly sketched by the speaker; how he was captured, and how in his cell in the Wartburg castle he translated the Bible into the German language, and by that act regenerated the German language 'Oh, Luther, hadst thou lived only for this-to give the Bible to thy countrymen in their own native tongue, in such vigor-ous and homely style that it speedily became a classic-thou hadst done a work for which posterity should ever honor thy and expect the aid of the spirit of all truth in understanding and interpreting M. A policeman was attracted by her cries, and when he reached her the dogs had pulled her into the street and torn nearly all her clothes from her. Her legs and arms were terribly licerated. The animals had to be beaten off with clubs. After a long chase both of the dogs were killed.

MR. L. ELLSWORTH,

Member of Metropolitan Police. HIS STORY AS TO HOW HE WAS AND HOW HE IS NOW.

Mr. L. Ellsworth, who has been on the Police Ferce for 8 years or more, and who resides at No. 1228 Duncan street n.e., tells the story of how

8 years ago, prin-ipally by clearing the throat and a sensation of dropping in my throat. It kept growing worse, and every fail I would have a pain n onth. The worst trouble came on in one night. I woke up in the night, and my nose was stopped up entirely. I had a great deal of pain then, and I got so that I could not sleep more than an hour at a time; my appetite was poor, and I was getting thin and getting weak, and trembied upon slight exertion. There was considerable odor to the discharges from my nose, and every time I blew my nose a pain would shoot up over my eyes, which was so severe that it would make me dizzy. I was in such a condition that if I could not get relief I would have to resign from the force. But I did get relief. I went to Dr. Jerdan; he said my nose was in a very bad condition; that the disease had even involved the bone, and quite a piece was already dead, which greatly aggravated the trouble. This he removed without pain, and from that day I began to improve. I have gained in flesh and strength, my appetite is good. I sleep splendidly. My nose is free to breathe through, and I feel that I owe more than I can ever give in praises of Dr. Jordau.'
